When it is remembered that four millions of slaves were enfranchised at the time when the Government began to contract the circulating mediam it will be admitted that no provision was made for the increased use of that medium by this new element of our citizenship. When they were slaves, working on the plantations and farms of their masters, the annual expenditure for their support was comparatively small. Since their emacipation, however, they have increased the demand and actual necessity for currency proportionately with their increased expenditures. Thus every black man, woman, or child who began at that time to wear shoes, calleoes, hats, &c., &c., and to develop the extravagance for which they are unfortunately noted, they increased the necessity for currency, and have continued to BLISHED EVERY MORNING

We have already expressed our opinion regarding the former, and do not hesitate now to declare our belief that Bayard has too much regard for his future to be made the tool of any party which has for its object a revival of the dead issues of States' rights, which would naturally follow from the nomination of such a man as Thur-

Mr. Maynard possesses many qualifications to render him acceptable to his consittents and the country as a legislator, but it must be admitted that Mr. Blaine's marvelous rapidity of thought and action, qualifications eminently necessary in the presiding officer of the House, are so striking as to enable him to overshadow all his competitors.

Sin 1: Old Probabilities having spitefully predicted had weather for us, has proved his right to be called Old Certainties once again. The beautiful and balmy weather we have been enjoying for the past two weeks has dissolved in rain to-day, and ever since dawn the slow, contingous rain-drops have pattered down, now fine and drizzling, now in great broad sheets of water, as if "The heart of neaven were breaking in tears over the fallen earth."

I fear we shall have a bad week for the fir, which begins on Taseday, the 28th, with a grand "flourish of trumpets."

ment of crops. In other words, and as we have persionsly explained, they have, during the seasons when crops were not moving, seduced the money of the country into strange channels. The country banks contributed to this unfortunate result by sending the surplus currency to New York, to be used in ventures which promised nussual returns. In this way the currency of the country was absorbed by investments in irregular channels, and when demands were made for its use in legitimate business transactions it was not forthcoming. At the same time it must be remembered that an additional use of currency was further created by the arrival of emigrants and the subsequent demand upon the circulating medium to defray the expense of their employment and support. When all this is taken into consideration, together with the growth of the country, it will be admitted that no adequate provision has been made to supply the constantly-increasing necessities of the country. We do not set ourselves up as advocates of inflation, but we do not hesitate to insist that Congress, when it assembles, should remember these facts. They speak volumes in support of the theory of inflation, it is true; but they do not present an exaggerated view of our most urgent requirements. They are plain enough, and as indisputable as they are plain.

Since a Bisnor of the Catholic Church anathematized the Cincinnati Commercial, the editor of which is no less than the mekt and lowly Murca Haistead, the journalists of Porkopolic are in a ferment of apprehension, not knowing which one of them will next be subjected to a similar infliction. Halstead takes it with humility, and, believing that there is good in everything, has turned it into an advertising dodge. Unlike the Kalamazoo Irishman, who, when snathematized by his Bishop, took it so much to heart that he mourned, sickened and died, Halstead has survived, and is impudent enough to grow fat and wax strong under it. This development of stony-hearted indifference from such a source is astonishing. It might have been expected from Decque Smeethe, but from the sober and phlegmatic Halstead, never!

JUDGE KELLEY's financial views, as given to the public in the columns of the Rigruntion. He is characterised, very property, as an inflationist, and, under the teachings of leading resumptionists, many people are inclined to find fault with his position. In view of the present searchy of currency, however, it is probable that the majority of our business men will agree with him that biunders were made by Congress in contracting the circulating medium.
